Leadership During Transitions

Denial, anger, bargaining, depression and acceptance

Change can be perceived as a sense of loss, a lack of control, a fear of failure and a sense of betrayal. This can lead to some common responses such as denial, anger, bargaining, depression and acceptance.

During transition, people may ask:

- "There's nothing wrong with how we were working. Why change?"
- "Are people going to have to relocate?"
- "What does this mean in terms of my work load?"
- "Who will I be reporting to?"

Key tasks for leadership to complete during this time include:

- Interpret & Communicate: Be honest, transparent and available. Communicate and respond to concerns.
- Support & Empower: Give as much structure as you can.
 Provide opportunities for development and training.
- Motivate & Energize: Help workers see their purpose in the change.
- Focus on what workers want and need: Information, input and the ability to be successful.
 Set up short-term goals with tangible results
- Seek Input: Encourage questions involve workers in problem-solving.
- Listen Actively & Empathetically: Demonstrate caring and respect.

Remember that you may also be personally impacted:

- Acknowledge and manage your stress points
- Identify what you can and can't control
- Find a focal point to keep your balance
- Be aware of stress and how it affects overall wellness
- Establish your own support system
- Exercise, rest and eat healthy

The USPS EAP offers both individual coaching, designed to promote self awareness, clarify visions and goals, and enhance skills, as well as coaching within a group which can assist before, during and after a change announcement. Connect with your EAP Consultant to learn more about how the coaching services can assist you personally and professionally.
